Ingrid Likes Much To Quit

Hollywood, Aug. 5.—Hollywood sceptics took with a grain of salt Ingrid Bergman's aunouncement that she was through with films because, they said, she liked to act too

One press agent who has known her since the start of her fabulous career, said: "I don't believe it. I'll bet anything she'll be back in movies next year."

Her friends were not surprised she was giving up her husband of 12 years. Dr Peter Lindstrom, apparently to marry Roberto Rossellini, director of her supposed swansong film, but they pooh-pooked the statement that the picture would be her last.

"She will he back." Troffed one of her supposed swanspicture would be her last.

"She will be back," scoffed one of her co-workers. "Ingrid's always loved to act. I think she was upset over the recent publicity. She always was interested in publicity and was troubled if it wasn't good." Reports reaching RKO Studio say "Stromboli" may be the greatest film of her life. Writer Art Cohn, sent by RHO to the island, wrote back: "This will be the most exciting movie she's ever made. You'll see a different Ingrid Bergman."

BUILD. INDEPENDENT STABLE NATION

Washington, Aug. 5.—The United States Secretary of State, Mr Dean Acheson, today advanced a five-point programme to encourage and support "an independent, liberally governed and free China."

and as harsh an instrument of tyranny as ever existed. When the charge was made originally in the United Nations Assembly last year, it was hotly denied by the Soviet representative, M. Pavlov, who called it a "monstrous" lie. This week, in the Economic and Social Council, M. Arutiunian, the Soviet delegate, sought to defend the system. by naming several irrelevant reasons for the British charges, the most startling of which was that the accusations were a smokescreen to cover the activities of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff nów visiting Europe to co-ordinate Western Union defence plans-Of the "Codex," M. Arutiunian said it was the most humane of its kind and had as its aims the "re-education of the people." The defence that in every civilised country convicted criminals are compelled to work in some form of confinement must bear examination of the nature and character of the practice. Between the institution of corrective. labour for criminals in normal civilised countries and that in the Soviet Unionand formerly in Nazi Germany-there is a profound difference. In the first case, those subjected to it are persons duly convicted after an open trial in a court of law for breaches of the known laws.

In British countries, for example, the Information produced to the Economic and Social Council estimates that some eight to ten million people are undergoing "correction" in camps in Russia remotely exiled from their homes. How many more millions have been brought under humble "correction" or have died in the process is difficult to estimate but easy to imagine. Little wonder Soviet delegates to the United Nations are trying their best to prevent the setting up of a commission of charge being made at once against him- | inquiry.

The Loles are numerically a small fraction of that. The Encyclopaedla Britannica neglects to tell us how many them there are and limits itself to stating that they have 'n written language that, as the Chinese does, starts from the top and goes down.

Travellers who have touched the skirt of Lololand - and that extends from parts of West China to the border of Indochins-tell us that they are, individually, better customers than the Hans but possess that most misunderstood of all commercial traits, a belief in solid metal or barter at worst. They don't know what the cost of living is, but they live handsomely irrespective of the wars soing on all around them.

Yung Hwa's Sins of Our Fathers, which starts its run at the Queen's and Alhambra on Tuesday, August, 9, tells of what happens when Hans and Lolos are romantically inclined towards one another. The setting is historical and the effort is cultural. The film has in it some original Lolo music and native

The autumn shows are most important of the year. will be interesting to see how these beautiful materials used by the designers.

Hot-Weather Skin Care

By HELEN FOLLETT

THERE are two kinds of freekles, those that appear with the first warm breezes of spring and fade out when the leaves begin to fall, and those that persist and stay by one all the year round. So-called summer freckles are no beauty hardship; they often give a young face a piquant, sassy appearance. It is likely, though, that the girl who has them doesn't think so. She yearns for the levely, clear, peachesand-cream complexion,

Let her keep this fact in mind; the more cream she uses on her skin, the less chance these yellow polka dots have to take up residence. The idea is to keep the flesh conditioned, to use protective measures against the ravages of harsh winds and strong sun light. A thin cream should be used for the purpose of removing makeup. A cosmette of heavier consistency should be applied at bedtime, allowed to remain on. By morning it will have disappeared

Twice a week, the nightly creaming should be omitted, the skin surface laved with a were peacock blue, tangerine oxide should be from a bottle recently opened. If it stands for too long a time, the effect may not be speedy.

> A foundation cosmetic, used before powdering, will act as a barrier against the elements. Soap and water should be used only at night, never just before going out of doors or directly after coming in when the skin is warm and glowing.

Liver spots are large, dark, chronic freckles, the result of changes in the pigment of the skin. The only way to be rid of them is to use a bleach so strong that the outer layer of the skin peels away. Treatembroidered ments of this kind ere given by specialists. It is not advisable to endeavour to be rid of them fragile lavender and green by home treatment. Liver spots should not be confused with moles which, also, should not be meddled with but should have professional attention.

It is well to keep a weather eye on your skin. Even teen agers should have their jars Another unusual material was of cream, especially during the summer season when the sun the care. It will show its gratitude in a smooth surface, epidermis of fine texture, colouring radiant and normal.

> The skin is constantly in state of decay and renewal shedding dead scales that give way to fresh, new ones. It finking goes on too rapidly the surface will be rough, will not accept make up agreeably. will show a mean disposition generally. This state of affairs leads to excessive dryness, promotes a condition that is ripe for premature wrinkles. The poor dear who is so afflicted must use creams lavishly. The ficsh will lap them up, feed upon them.

For almost two years now Shirley May France, of Somerset, Massachusetts, has given up all the things that usually go with being 16, a pretty blonde with a gay laugh and the possessor of a much-betterthan-average physique.

There have been no parties, no boy friends, no cigarettes. Ice cream strictly rationed to one scoop a day, for a girl who can normally handle six with ease. And no soda pop at all.

SPORT THE ANCIENT REGAINING ITS POPULARITY

Is there to be a return of tennis to popularity? I am prompted to ask that question because of the activities in London, Paris and New York. It should, of course, be made clear that I refer to the ancient and royal pastime of tennis and not to the less-than-a-century-old game of lawn tennis, which is what most people think of today when they hear the word tennis.

Worcester Win Would Suit Everybody SAYS BRUCE HARRIS

Curious thing about County Cricket last year was that everyone - even the staunchest supporters of Middlesex and Yorkshire-was pleased when Glamorgan won the Championship.

And, from what I hear, the same applies to Worcester this season. They have a great chance of their first-ever win. They still have to play one of their chief challengers, Middlesex, but Middlesex will be weakened by a Test match.

This is at Lord's when these two (with possibly Robertson or Young) will almost certainly be across the river in the last is one of those footballers who Test at The Oval.

INTELLIGENCE TEST SOLUTION

Not a difficult puzzle. The longer poem earns £3 15s., 2d. more than the shorter one. Divide this sum by 11d. (8d. plus 3d.) and we get 83; the number of lines in the Birthday Ode.

Now from £4 8s. 6d. subtract 42 elevenpences and 40 threepences, and we are left with £3.

So the answer is a "stipulated sum" of £2.
